Order Issued in Skinner Landfill Probe

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has issued an administrative order requiring the owners of the Skinner Landfill in West Chester to allow the EPA access to the site without interference and to stop further dumping in areas subject to an EPA remedial investigation.

The order was issued, according to a letter from two officials of the EPA regional office in Chicago, Ill., because landfill operators continued to pile waste materials on top of a buried lagoon despite an earlier was also making his first campaign for public office.

Conrad Dietz of 6514 Seminole Dr., West Chester, placed last in the race with 1,470 votes.

Mrs. Dolan headed the successful campaign by the Yes Lakota Levy Committee to win voter approval of a 5.9-mill school operations levy in May of 1985, and also was active in campaigns to preserve the levy in the fall of 1985 and to win voter approval of a $7.7-million building agreement not to interfere with the EPA activities at the landfill.

The EPA had cancelled plans for legal action as a result of the agreement regarding the buried lagoon, considered by the EPA to be a possible major source of site contamination.

Since the administrative order was issued Sept. 24, owners of the landfill have complied with the order, according to the EPA.
Failure to comply would subject them to a possible fine of $25,000 per day.

The threat of court action was raised in May after the EPA accused landfill owners of piling concrete and metal materials on top of areas designated for study during the remedial investigation to determine if industrial wastes dumped years ago have contaminated the area.

The first of two phases of the investigation has been completed.
The 78-acre landfill, located to the east of Cincinnati-Dayton Road with an entrance at 8750 Cincinnati-Dayton Rd., currently accepts demolition debris but has been barred from accepting industrial wastes since the late 1970s.
